1: Roth--1 [2] (No date) 1890 Tasmanians

116, 133

"Its general character is mountainous, with numerous beautiful valleys, rendered fertile by numberless streams descending from the hills, and watering, in their course to the sea, large tracts of country."

1: Roth--165
116, 133, 823

(No date) 1890

Tasmanians

"'Their geographical knowledge of the country in which they lived is remarkably accurate and minute. The relative bearings and distances of its more prominent headlands, bays, mountains, lakes, and rivers, are distinctly impressed on their minds. When at any time a chart of Tasmania is presented to them, it seems, at least, in the case of the older and more intelligent aborigines, only to embody the picture of its form and dimensions which their own fancy had enabled them to sketch' (Dove, I. p. 251)."